Chapter 1 Summary: 1. Petra

In the opening chapter of "Pumpkin" by Megan Wade, we meet Petra, a college student feeling the sting of a snowstorm that has canceled her plans to fly home for Thanksgiving. It's her first holiday away from her family, and the disappointment weighs heavily on her as she talks with her dad, who's enjoying sunny Florida. Petra reflects on how important Thanksgiving is to her, particularly because she's never been alone on the holiday. The conversation reveals her deep sense of family tradition and connection.

As Petra grapples with her sadness, her supportive roommate Claire comes to the rescue, suggesting that Petra join her and her older brother Fin for Thanksgiving. This proposal stirs up a mix of emotions in Petra—while she's uncomfortable at the thought of intruding, she's also thrilled at the chance to be closer to Fin, who has been a longtime crush. Petra admires Fin not just for his looks but also for his character; he selflessly raised Claire after they lost their parents, taking on the role of guardian despite his own missed opportunities in life.

Claire's insistence—backed by her heartfelt appeal relating to their mother's absence—eventually persuades Petra to accept the invitation. This sets the stage for a holiday filled with food, camaraderie, and introspection. Themes of family, the significance of cherished traditions, and the complexities of unrequited love come to life as Petra navigates her feelings and

Chapter 2 Summary: 3. Petra

In this chapter, we follow Petra as she climbs the stairs to Fin's apartment, her heart racing at the thought of spending three whole days with him. Accompanied by her friend Claire, she tries to mask her nervousness while listening to Claire vent about her own relationship issues with her boyfriend, Dave. While Claire wrestles with the pressure of meeting Dave's parents and the complexities of young love, Petra reflects on her own feelings for Fin, who is Claire's older brother and the object of her affection.

Petra struggles with feelings of inadequacy, comparing herself to the glamorous women Fin has dated in the past. Despite her self-acceptance and the perks that come with her curvy figure, she's resigned to the idea that Fin is out of her league. Upon entering the apartment, Petra is overshadowed by Fin's distant demeanor as he works in his home office, causing her to feel even more out of place. Claire's exasperation over Fin's rudeness during the holidays highlights the tension between family obligations and personal pursuits.

When Petra finally meets Fin face-to-face, her attraction is palpable. Standing tall and confident, Fin's simple greeting sends shivers down her spine, intensifying her crush. He acknowledges her talent for making pumpkin pie, a nod to their shared family tradition, and gives her the green light to gather ingredients from the kitchen. In this moment, Petra is caught

Finlay is irresistibly drawn to Petra, captivated by her soft curves and the innocence that radiates from her, contrasting with his more primal desires. Petra's voice shakes as she informs him about the missing cranberries and heavy cream, revealing her nervousness around him, which oddly heightens his desire.

Despite the awkwardness, Finlay suggests they go to the store together, his casual demeanor masking the heated thoughts racing through his mind. The interaction is fraught with unspoken feelings, especially when he holds her coat for her, enveloped by the sweet scent of her hair, which only fuels his fantasies about her.
