In the opening chapter of "Secrets and Seduction" by Bianca Mov, we are introduced to Avery, a student living in a prestigious and somewhat oppressive boarding school setting. Avery is feeling trapped and frustrated, especially with the demanding homework assigned by her professor, Mr. Preston, whom she finds immovable and insufferable. As she navigates her day, we see her grappling with the pressures of her new environment, feeling both alienated and longing for freedom.

Avery interacts with her classmates, particularly Noah, who seems charming and magnetic, yet she remains cautious about developing any relationships, haunted by a past trauma. Her unease grows when she encounters another classmate, Olivia, who appears visibly ill, provoking Avery's instinctive desire to help. However, Olivia's strange insistence that she is fine triggers a sense of foreboding in Avery, hinting at deeper issues within the school's community.

The dynamic between Avery and Mr. Preston escalates during their tutoring session, where feelings of anger and vulnerability surface. Forced to play the piano—a source of past pain for her—Avery reveals the tragic accident that led to her injuries and dashed aspirations. This emotional moment shows not only her internal struggles but also Mr. Preston's contradictory demeanor, as he oscillates between authority and what appears to be a strange connection

As the chapter progresses, Avery's emotions reach a boiling point, culminating in a heated exchange with Mr. Preston. As she walks through the school's gardens, seeking solace and clarity, Avery stumbles upon Olivia's lifeless body, shattering any sense of safety and igniting confusion and horror.
